

Keenan Boyle has more than 20 years of commercial brokerage experience in the Portland Metro area. Before starting his real estate career, Keenan worked in the hotel industry, completing a corporate internship and corporate management training program with Hyatt Hotels.

Keenan is active in helping his clients in all aspects of investing in commercial real estate. His depth of management experience is paramount in helping clients decide which property to buy; analyzing financial data, maintenance histories and determining if there are any deferred maintenance issues are his areas of strength. After the purchase, Keenan continues to assist clients by handling the property management, suggesting repositioning strategies, providing leasing services, supervising tenant improvements and remodeling, and eventually overseeing the sale of the property when the timing is right for the client. Keenan has successfully negotiated leases with first-time business owners, Fortune 500 corporations and everything in-between.

Over the last 20 years, Keenan has built a solid reputation with his clients as a thorough and detailed broker, leasing agent and property manager, taking care to protect the interests of his clients while serving as a responsive and fair representative to all tenants. Many of Keenan's client's have been with him since he started Columbia Commercial Properties with Dave Brown in 1997.

Keenan is a Certified Property Management candidate and has successfully completed the Institute of Real Estate Management 300, 400 and 500 level courses. He is a business graduate of Oregon State University.

An avid outdoorsman, Keenan enjoys nothing more than fishing for salmon or steelhead while standing waist deep in the middle of a frigid river. When that isn't possible, he occupies his time working on the small farm he and his wife, Rebecca, share with their young daughter in Canby, Oregon.
